THE STORY

PROLOGUE

A cruel Prince is cursed as he hunts a Vixen, becoming a terrible Beast, whilst the Vixen is transformed into a Wild Girl.

ACT I

Belle's father, a Merchant, believing his fortune lost at sea, accepts money from the rich Monsieur Cochon to pay bailiffs, but Cochon is motivated by his desire to marry one of the sisters.

The Merchant's ships are then sighted and he leaves to meet them, promising his daughters gifts; Belle asks for a single rose.

Robbed during a storm, the Merchant takes refuge in a castle.

The next morning, he finds his trunk returned and full of gifts for his daughters. Remembering Belle, as he leaves, he picks a rose.

Outraged at the theft, a monstrous Beast appears: in return for his life, the Merchant must send his youngest daughter to the castle. Wanting to save her father, Belle agrees.

ACT II

Every night for months the Beast asks Belle to marry him, but is turned down each time. The Beast throws an extravagant ball and once again asks Belle for her hand.

She refuses again and the Beast descends into a rage.

Belle asks to leave to see her father. The Beast agrees, but gives her another rose: she must return before the rose dies, or he too will die. Belle arrives home to find wedding preparations under way, but the greedy Cochon has yet to decide which sister he wants as his wife! Explaining her situation to her jealous sisters, Belle is detained by them

whilst, back at his castle, the Beast begins to die.

Returning at the last minute, Belle declares her love for the Beast whereupon the curse is lifted and he transforms back into a handsome Prince
